eTwinning Project Evaluation Report

“Voices of Children: Our Messages to the World”

Student Feedback Survey — Results & Analysis

1. Introduction

At the close of the eTwinning project “Voices of Children: Our Messages to the World,” the participating students completed an anonymous online evaluation questionnaire reflecting on their experience across the project's activities. This report summarises and analyses their responses in order to capture the project's impact, identify the activities that resonated most strongly, and inform the planning of future eTwinning initiatives.

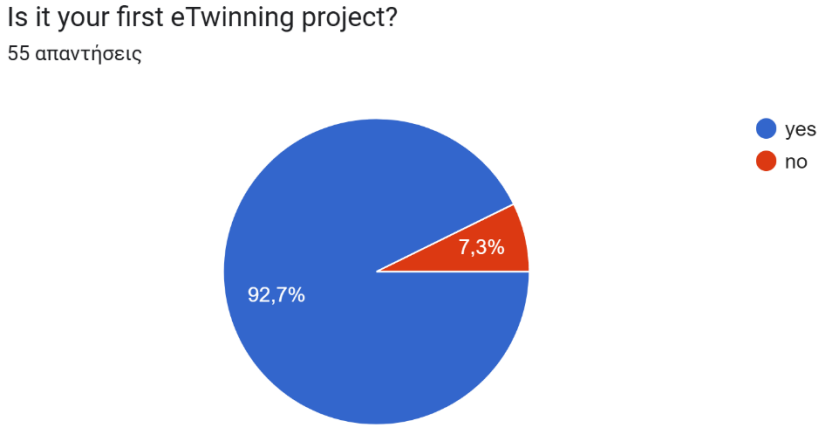

A total of 55 valid student responses were collected. Students rated eight individual activities and the online meetings on a 1–5 scale, rated the project as a whole, and answered open-ended questions about what they learned and what they would like to explore in a future project.

2. Respondent Profile

The survey reached a student body largely new to the eTwinning framework:

- 51 of 55 students (93%) said this was their first eTwinning project.
- 4 of 55 students (7%) had taken part in an eTwinning project before.

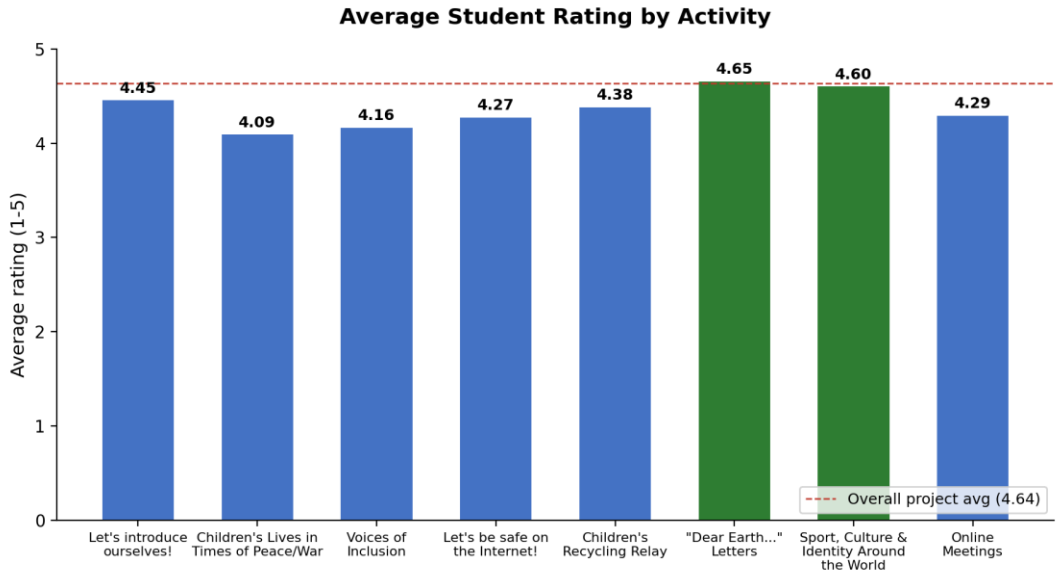

This high share of first-time participants suggests the project served as many students' introduction to international, collaborative online learning — which makes the strongly positive results below particularly encouraging.

3. Activity Ratings

Students rated each of the seven core activities, plus the online meetings, on a scale of 1 (lowest) to 5 (highest). Average scores are presented below, ordered from lowest to highest.

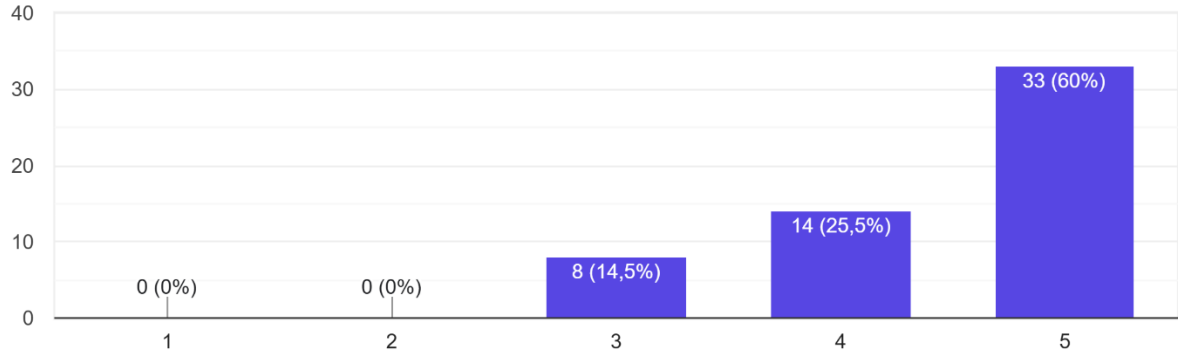

Activity	Average	Min	Max
Children’s Lives in Times of Peace and War	4.09	1	5
Voices of Inclusion	4.16	2	5
Online meetings	4.29	1	5
Let's be safe on the Internet!	4.27	2	5
Children’s Recycling Relay	4.38	2	5
Let's introduce ourselves!	4.45	3	5
Sport, Culture and Identity Around the World	4.60	2	5
“Dear Earth...” Letters	4.65	2	5

All activities received strongly positive average ratings (4.09–4.65 out of 5), with no activity falling below “good.” The “Dear Earth...” Letters and Sport, Culture and Identity Around the World stood out as the most appreciated activities. Children's Lives in Times of Peace and War and Voices of Inclusion received the (relatively) lowest — though still positive — average ratings, and were also the only two activities to receive a rating of 1 or 2 from at least one student; this may be worth a closer look, given the sensitive and emotionally demanding nature of these two topics for a young audience.

4. Overall Project Satisfaction

Asked to rate the project as a whole, students responded very positively:

- Average overall rating: 4.64 out of 5
- 39 of 55 students (71%) gave the maximum score of 5
- 13 of 55 students (24%) gave a 4
- Only 3 students (5%) rated the project 3 or below, including a single rating of 2

This places overall satisfaction higher than the average of any individual activity, suggesting that the cumulative experience of the project — the combination of activities, collaboration, and meeting international peers — was valued even more than its individual parts.

5. What Students Learned

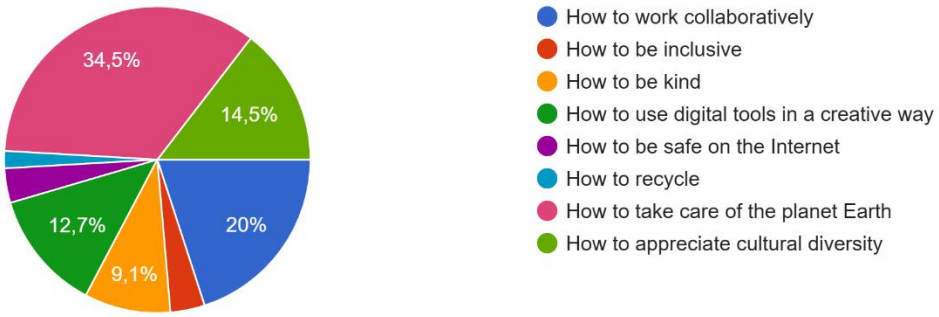

In response to the open-ended question “What is the most important thing you learned?”, answers clustered into a small number of recurring themes:

Theme	Students	Share
How to take care of the planet Earth	19	35%
How to work collaboratively	11	20%
How to appreciate cultural diversity	8	15%
How to use digital tools in a creative way	7	13%
How to be kind	5	9%
How to be inclusive	2	4%
How to be safe on the Internet	2	4%
How to recycle	1	2%

Environmental awareness clearly emerged as the single strongest takeaway, named by over a third of students — a direct reflection of the “Dear Earth...” Letters and Children's Recycling Relay activities, both rated highly above. Collaboration and cultural diversity were the next most cited lessons, pointing to the project's success in delivering on its core eTwinning aims of teamwork and intercultural understanding.

6. Interest in Future Projects

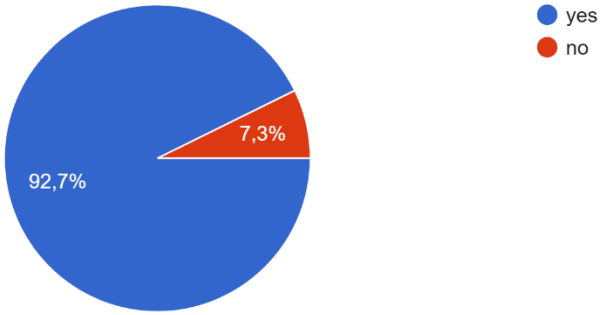

Students were asked whether they would like to take part in a new eTwinning project next school year:

- 51 of 55 students (93%) said yes.
- 4 of 55 students (7%) said no.

This near-universal enthusiasm to continue is one of the clearest indicators of the project's success.

Would you like to have a new eTwinning project for the next school year?

Topics students would like to explore next

When asked what topic they would like for a future project, students gave a wide range of free-text answers. Grouped by theme:

Theme	Students	Share
Sports & games (incl. video games)	20	36%
Environment, nature & animals	11	20%
Arts, music & creativity	9	16%
Mythology & culture	7	13%
Other (peace, food, languages, internet safety, etc.)	7	13%
Not sure	1	2%

Sport and games topped the list by a clear margin, echoing the strong rating already given to the "Sport, Culture and Identity Around the World" activity. Environmental themes remain a close second, confirming that the ecological focus of this project left a lasting impression that students want to build on further.

7. Conclusions and Recommendations

- Overall, the project was very well received: an average rating of 4.64/5, with 95% of students scoring it 4 or 5.
- The high proportion of first-time eTwinning participants (93%) who nonetheless rated the experience so positively, and who overwhelmingly want to continue (93%), points to strong potential for sustained engagement with eTwinning in the years ahead.
- Environmental sustainability was both the most appreciated thread of the project and the most frequently cited lesson learned — a strong candidate to carry forward, possibly combined with the clear student demand for sport- and game-based activities (e.g. an eco-themed sports challenge or outdoor relay).
- Children's Lives in Times of Peace and War and Voices of Inclusion, while still rated positively overall, scored somewhat lower and drew the only ratings of 1–2. Given the sensitivity of these topics for younger students, it may be worth reviewing how they were introduced and supported (e.g. additional scaffolding, follow-up discussion, or age-appropriate framing) before reusing them in a future project.
- A future project built around sport/games and the environment - the two most requested themes - would align closely with what students themselves are asking for, while preserving the collaborative, cross-cultural format that the survey shows they valued most.
